Focus On Wellness

Your oral health and overall health are inseparable

The vast majority of North Americans develop periodontal disease during their lifetime, either early-stage gum disease called gingivitis or a more serious infection called periodontitis. Both are caused by bacteria buildup.

If not treated, gums become swollen and angry-looking, and the infection begins to destroy the supporting tissues surrounding your teeth with potentially severe consequences such as tooth loss.

Dental science has proven that there is a direct link between gum disease and your overall health, including increasing the risk of cardiovascular disease and complicating the treatment of diabetes.

Follow these simple rules to keep gum disease at bay...

- Brush and rinse thoroughly after every meal.
- Floss at least once a day.
- Keep regularly scheduled hygiene appointments.

Yours in good dental health,

But when you refer a family member, friend, or colleague to our practice it really does mean something special. Clean Your Teeth...

Clean your toothbrush!

We put our toothbrushes in our mouths at least twice a day - often without thought to its cleanliness. Think about this: would you use a dinner fork that hadn't been thoroughly washed? Scientific studies have shown that air-borne bacteria in bathrooms are a fact, and here's what you can do to make sure your toothbrush is fully sanitized...

- Store it standing up so the bristles drain.
- Keep it in the cupboard to protect it from air-borne germs.
- Knock out the extra water.
- Make sure no food particles are trapped in the bristles or on the tongue cleaner.
- Consider using an inexpensive UV light toothbrush sanitizer. One quick touch and 99.9% of the germs will be gone!
